Cells are the smallest units that can live on their own. Every plant and animal is built from them.

The nucleus holds the genetic material and controls what the cell does.

Fig. 2

Mitochondria release energy from food. Busy cells, such as muscle cells, have many of them.